RISKS OF ATHLETIC PARTICIPATION

1. There is the inherent risk of injury in all sports.
2. The number and types of injuries differ for all sports but fall into the following general categories:
 - a. Lacerations and abrasions (e.g., cuts and scrapes): The long-term result of these is usually minor if cared for correctly. The most common risk may result in a scar, which may be a cosmetic deformity. IF THE CUT IS DEEP ENOUGH IT MIGHT AFFECT YOUR MUSCLES, NERVES, BONES OR CIRCULATION. The result of this might be the permanent loss of the use of that muscle, paralysis, or use of the injured area.
 - b. Sprains and strains (e.g., injuries to your joints or muscles): Most of these are minor and require only therapy to recover from them. The more serious of these may require surgery and/or casting to restore the muscle or joint. There will also be the cosmetic result of a scar. THE FORCES THAT CAUSE THESE TYPES OF INJURIES MAY ALSO INJURE OTHER BODY STRUCTURES AT THE SAME TIME SUCH AS NERVES AND BLOOD VESSELS. The therapy is much longer. Because of this type of injury you may not be able to return to the same skill level that you had before the injury. You may also have an increased chance of later problems, such as arthritis, with the joint or muscle. In the most serious cases you may not be able to run, walk, get jobs requiring physical strength or skill (e.g., police or firefighting work) or perform fine motor functions (e.g., playing the piano). You may also have difficulty in performing day-to-day activities such as bending or walking.
 - c. Fractures (e.g., broken bones): If even minor fractures are ignored the result may be the loss of some physical capabilities. The more serious of these may require surgery and/or casting to restore the broken bones. There may also be the cosmetic result of a scar. THE FORCES THAT CAUSE THESE TYPES OF INJURIES MAY ALSO INJURE OTHER BODY STRUCTURES AT THE SAME TIME SUCH AS NERVES AND BLOOD VESSELS. Because of this type of injury you may not be able to return to the same skill level that you had before the injury. You may also have an increased chance of later problems, such as arthritis, with the joint or muscle. In the most serious cases you may not be able to run, walk, get jobs requiring physical strength or skill (e.g., police or firefighting work) or perform fine motor functions (e.g., playing the piano). You may also have difficulty in performing day-to-day activities such as bending or walking.
 - d. Catastrophic injuries: These types of injuries are rare but do happen. They are injuries to your nerves, blood vessels, heart, brain, internal organs, sexual organs, eyes, ears and nose. The long term risk of these is much more serious. You may even die from these injuries. You may lose the function of a joint or limb. You may be permanently paralyzed, not be able to move your arms or legs on your own and be confined to a wheelchair. Assistance may be required for you to perform the most basic of bodily functions, such as a bowel movement. You could be blinded or lose your hearing. Your access to the job market may be severely restricted, and your family and social life may also be very limited.

I have read and understand the above.
